WHITE SPOT PIPES 'THE TOWN MUSICIANS OF BREMEN'

THE BROTHERS GRIMM

Some of the best-known fairy tales known were collected, written down and finally published by the German brothers Jacob and Wilhelm Grimm at the beginning of the 19th century.

Among the stories thus popularized in written form to a national and international audience were, among others, Hansel & Gretel, The Frog King, The Wolf and the Seven Kids, Rapunzel, The Brave Little Tailor, Cinderella, Mother Holle, Little Red Cap, Sleeping Beauty, Little Snow White, Rumpelstiltskin, and Hans in Luck.

One of the popular folk tales with a distinct socio-critical storyline is The Town Musicians of Bremen, first published in Grimms' Fairy Tales in 1819.

It is the story of four aging animals - a donkey, a dog, a cat and a rooster - who, after suffering through many years of hard labour for their human masters, decide to run away in order to become town musicians in the free city of Bremen.

During their journey towards Bremen, they encounter a group of bandits. They succeed to occupy the bandit's house, to chase the bandits away and finally decide not to continue to Bremen and to become town musicians ...

... but to stay together and to live in that house happily ever after for the rest of their days.

WHITE SPOT PIPES 'MONTGOLFIER'

THE MONTGOLFIER BROTHERS

The brothers Montgolfier, both born in Annonay in southern France, were French paper manufacturers by profession but became famous as the inventors of the hot air balloon and aviation pioneers.

Joseph-Michel Montgolfier (1740-1810) and Jacques-Étienne Montgolfier (1745-1799) are historically best known as inventors of the Montgolfière-style hot air balloon, the globe aérostatique.

During 1782, Joseph-Michel had observed embers lifting from a fire into the air, which gave him the idea for an experiment. He constructed a box with a volume of approximately 1.3m^3 , made from very light wood and covered on 5 sides with taffeta fabric, but leaving the bottom side open; when he lit it from below with crumbled paper as a heat source, the box lifted into the air until it hit the ceiling of the room.

Encouraged by this first successful experiment, he contacted his brother Jacques-Étienne.

Together, they built a much larger box, 27 times greater in volume. On 14 December 1782 they did the test flight, using hay and wool for the fire, and this box flew almost for two kilometers.

To claim their invention the brothers decided to leave obscurity and to go public.

They changed the construction to a globe-shaped balloon made from sack-cloth and layers of paper, with a volume of nearly 790 m^3 ($28,000\text{ ft}^3$) of air and a weight of 225 kg (500 lb). On 4 June 1783, they flew the balloon at their hometown of Annonay in front of a group of dignitaries. The flight covered 2 km (1.2 mi), lasted 10 minutes, and had an estimated altitude of 1,600-2,000 m (5,200-6,600 ft). The news of this spectacular endeavour quickly spread to Paris ... and to the French Royal court.

Enlisting the support of the wealthy wallpaper manufacturer Jean-Baptiste Réveillon, Jacques-Étienne built an impressive $1,060\text{ m}^3$ (37,500-cubic-foot) balloon held in sky blue colour, attractively decorated with golden patterns, Zodiac signs, and suns. The king himself had originally suggested to test this flight with two convicted criminals as passengers, but on 11 September the balloon was launched in Paris from the grounds of la Folie Titon, close to Réveillon's factory, first without any passengers.

PRODUCT NEWS

On 19 September 1783, the Aérostat Réveillon was launched from the royal palace in Versailles in front of King Louis XVI of France, Queen Marie Antoinette and the royal court. To test the effect of the higher atmospheres on living creatures, the balloon carried the first living passengers: a sheep named Mont-au-ciel (engl. “Climb-to-the-sky”), a duck, and a rooster. The flight lasted approximately eight minutes, covered three kilometres (2 miles), and obtained an altitude of about 460m (1,500 ft) after which it safely landed.

As the animals had survived this flight unscathed, the king now authorised flights with humans. For this purpose, Jacques-Étienne built in collaboration with Réveillon a 1,700 m³ (60,000 ft³) balloon, about 21m (70 feet) tall and 14m (46 feet) in diameter. Réveillon supplied the paper with rich decorations of gold figures on a blue background, including fleur-de-lis and the 12 zodiac signs in the upper section, suns with Louis XVI's face in the centre interlaced with the royal monogram in the central section and red & blue drapery and golden eagles at the base of the balloon.

On 15 October 1783, Jacques-Étienne Montgolfier was the first human to lift off earth in a tethered test flight. Thus, the age of human flight had started.

On 21 November 1783, the first free flight by humans was made by the physicist Jean-François Pilâtre de Rozier, together with an army officer, the Marquis François Laurent d'Arlandes.

In 1983, the Montgolfier brothers were inducted into the International Air & Space Hall of Fame at the San Diego Air & Space Museum.
